Chapter 203: The Divine Convoy

The Divine Armada—a vast collection of warships and spacecraft—was one of the most powerful and advanced military forces in the multiverse. It was a symbol of the Divine Triad's dominance and Sung Jin-Woo's ever-expanding reach. Yet, despite the grandeur of the Armada, a particular mission remained dormant for a time, held in reserve: the deployment of the Divine Convoy into the conquered Abyss.

The Formation of the Divine Convoy

Sung Jin-Woo, ever careful with his choices, had long anticipated this moment. He had waited for the right time to dispatch a convoy of extraordinary power into the Abyss, a place that had once been teeming with countless challenges and threats.

The Divine Convoy consisted of:

One Divine Warship, carrying a fleet of 1000 space-planes capable of rapid strikes and maneuvering.

Two Cruiser-Class Spaceships, built for high-capacity transportation and powerful long-range bombardments.

Three Destroyer-Class Spaceships, designed for heavy assault and capable of overwhelming any resistance.

Ten Space-Frigates, smaller yet highly agile ships, essential for tactical operations and reconnaissance.

Each of these vessels was manned by millions of materialized shadow soldiers, their eerie presence fueling the immense strength of the Convoy. These soldiers, created from the boundless energy of the Shadow Sovereign, were designed to serve without fatigue, capable of maintaining their vigilance in the harshest environments.

Why the Delay?

Despite the immense power of the Divine Convoy, Sung Jin-Woo had delayed its deployment when the Abyss was first conquered. The Abyss, a realm brimming with unstable energies and chaos, was a place that had once been home to powerful entities and energies beyond imagination. Sending such a vast and complex fleet into its depths was a risky endeavor.

The main concern? The Abyss was still unstable, and the fear that the Divine Convoy might implode or explode from the turbulent and unpredictable forces within the Abyss was too great to ignore. The immense energy of the Core of Forgotten Truths and the lingering, unknown dangers of the realm made the risk far too great, even for someone of Sung Jin-Woo's caliber.

The Decision to Proceed

After years of preparation, research, and further examination of the Abyss, Sung Jin-Woo had finally made the decision. The forces of the Divine Triad had reshaped the multiverse, and now, it was time to venture once more into the depths of the Abyss with the Divine Convoy.

The potential for this fleet was not only military in nature but also strategic. The Divine Convoy was more than just a force of destruction; it was a testament to the ever-growing reach of Sung Jin-Woo's power. The deployment of this massive fleet was not only to secure the Abyss but also to solidify his claim over the realms that he now controlled. There were whispers among the shadows that such an operation would mark the final subjugation of the Abyss, a true testament to Sung Jin-Woo's sovereignty.

The Invasion of the Abyss

As the Divine Convoy sailed toward the Abyss, the energy of its ships—driven by millions of materialized shadow soldiers—formed a formidable force of god-like precision. The warship, accompanied by the cruisers, destroyers, and frigates, moved as one, striking fear into any remnants of resistance that might still linger in the Abyss.

The ship's shadows, flickering with unnatural energy, became the very harbingers of an era where no challenge would stand against the Shadow Sovereign's might. The mission was now set in motion, and with every passing moment, the Divine Convoy solidified its place in the annals of history.

The Abyss, once a realm of mystery and danger, was about to witness its final conquest—its energies contained, controlled, and bound by the overwhelming force of the Divine Convoy.

The age of chaos was over. The age of absolute order had arrived.

And with that, Sung Jin-Woo's grip on the multiverse tightened even further.
